Tin is one of the oldest metals of mankind, also one of the most modern as it finds new applications in photovoltaic panels and electric vehicles

Solder accounts for nearly half of tin consumed

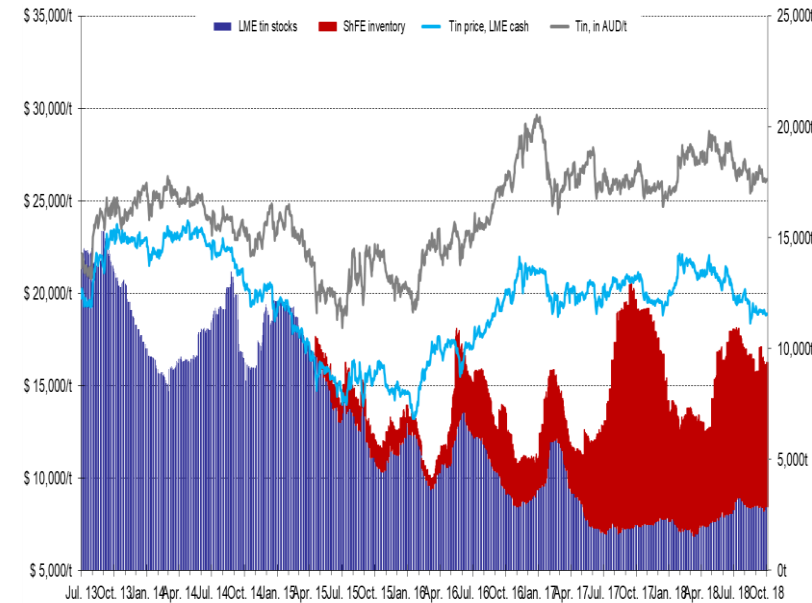

Consumer electronics and transport are together over half of tin demand

Total refined tin use in 2017:
362,500 tonnes

There are many exciting emerging applications, with some 8,000 significant tin R&D publications each year

Global Tin Supply is Challenged

Data from the International Tin Association shows that mined tin supply peaked in 2005 and the fall in supply has been arrested by the emergence of new supply from Myanmar, which is now in decline.

Shares of world mine output

With emerging demand and challenged supply, International Tin Association projects that global tin inventories will decline further and that prices will rise

Medium-term price outlook

Outlook positive but risks remain

Keynote Speaker

Clyde Russell Reuters Columnist

Clyde Russell is Asia Commodities and Energy Columnist at Reuters. He has been a journalist and editor for 28 years covering everything from wars in Africa to the resources boom and its current demise. Born in Glasgow, he has lived in Johannesburg, Sydney, Singapore and now splits his time between Tasmania and Asia. He writes about trends in commodity and energy markets, with a particular focus on China. Before becoming a financial journalist in 1996, Clyde covered civil wars in Angola, Mozambique and other African hotspots for Agence-France Presse.

LME tin stocks are now close to historic lows
